Head of BBN: Iran deal reduces tension

The agreement on Iran's nuclear programme does not solve the problem but it does reduce international tension, according to head of BBN Stanislaw Koziej.

"It is quite an optimistic fact that a compromise has been found enabling negotiations to be continued", S. Koziej told on Friday.

"The agreement does not resolve the problem but it does reduce international tension for a few months when it is already substantial due to the Russia-Ukraine conflict and the conflict within Islam in the Middle East and North Africa," BBN head continued.

He said he hoped that the general premises of the agreement on Iran's nuclear programme would be clarified in the coming weeks and put into practice, but added that there were still risks involved.
